CALL FOR MASS MEETING OF DAYTONA CITIZENS DREW HUNDREDS OF FOLK

Discussions of Municipal Affairs Resulted in Added Impetus to Commission Government Movement--Petitions Circulated--Voters League Formed.

A call issued several days ago for a mass meeting for the stated purpose of discussing municipal taxation resulted in the assembly at the New Daytona theater, Monday evening, of a surprisingly large number of men and ladies of Daytona and the neighboring communities. The theater was filled, and the crowd has been conservatively estimated at from 500 to 700 people.

After the object of the gathering had been stated, Galen B. Seaman was formally declared chairman, and to Geo. F. Smith was entrusted the duty of filling the secretarial post. Both occupied positions on the stage.

Chairman Seaman prefaced with a few extemporaneous remarks the reading of a paper he had previously prepared. The paper was in the nature of a discussion of municipal taxation and other civic affairs. Among the significant statements made were that the 1915 assessments of Daytona property subject to taxation had been increased about 100 per cent., and that the ad valorem rate of taxation had been raised approximately 40 per cent. Reference was made to "needless extravagance in public expenditures," and the speaker took occasion to say that the attitude of the city authorities seemed to be "another case of the people be damned!" Allusion was made to the alleged fact that many Florida cities have adopted or are about to adopt the commission form of government. Applause followed the conclusion of Mr. Seaman's remarks.

Theodore Hofstatter asked and was granted permission to address the audience. He read from voluminous notes, and began his talk with the statement that Daytona seems to be entering upon a new era, following with an elaborate array of figures having to do with the city's tax problems. The items of the current year's budget were gone over in detail, and in further commenting on the alleged mismanagement of municipal affairs the speaker said there appears to be "something radically wrong, without a question." Then Mr. Hofstatter went out of his way to take a punch at the Daytona newspapers, charging that they had not given proper support to public movements. He did not trouble himself to give specific instances of the newspapers' neglect of the public's interests. His remarks were applauded.

J. T. Nelson arose from his seat and stated that it seemed, to him, inappropriate that the men who constitute the city government should not be present at a public meeting of that character and be given an opportunity to speak for themselves, insisting that it was the duty of the mayor and council to be there. The chairman reminded Mr. Nelson that the council was at that moment engaged in holding its regular semi-monthly meeting and that the members could not reasonably be expected to neglect their duties and attend the mass meeting. Mr. Nelson retorted that the mass meeting was of more importance than the council meeting, and offered a motion embodying a formal invitation to the officials to adjourn and come to the opera house. The motion was numerously seconded, and carried. The chair appointed a committee to immediately notify the council

BISHOP CAMERON MANN PRESIDED

BISHOP OF SOUTH FLORIDA VIS-ITS ST. MARY'S EPISCOPAL CHURCH AND CONFIRMS CLASS OF SEVEN.

The special services held at St.
Mary's Episcopal church, Monday evening were very interesting and quite well attended, considering the fact that a mass meeting was being conducted at the New Daytona theater and several social affairs also attracted the public.

An excellent sermon was delivered by Right Rev. Cameron Mann, D. D., bishop of the southern diocese of Florida. The bishop also administered the rite of confirmation to a class of seven members.

A quartet furnished music during the evening and there was a solo by R. L. Evernden. The church was very beautifully decorated for the occasion with roses and lilies.

erell, of Haverhill, Mass., were Daytona visitors and guests at the Gables hotel from Thursday of last week until Monday when they left on their return north. While here Messrs.
Jennings and Witherell were not idle, but through N. Y. Boris purchased two river lots at Holly Hill upon which they propose to erect bungalows for winter homes.

north Monday afternoon. Mr. Spring has known Miss Loomis since her childhood.

MOST ANCIENT RACE

Cave Gives Up Relics Many Thousand Years Old.

Explorations by Nevada Archeologists Prove Truth of Plute Legends of Lost Cavern—Sealed Up by Nature.

Kansas City.—The archeological department of the University of Nevada has nearly completed the exploration of a cave in Nevada, sealed up by nature 3,000 years ago. It contains relics of what is believed to be the ancient race from which the American Indians sprang, a race far older than the Aztecs. Among the things brought to light is a skull declared to be more than 5,000 years old certainly and possibly in existence several hundred thousand years ago.
If these surmises are correct it is older than the Pitdown skull, found in Kent, England.

Along with the skull were found many relics of a prehistoric race in a remarkable state of preservation, because they have been hermetically sealed in nature's own preservatives.
The first mention of this ancient civilization that is remembered by white men dates back to 1844, when General Fremont led from California a little band of whites across a new trail through the Rockies. He followed the Humboldt river until he came to the shores of what is now called Humboldt lake, a half mile east of the main Humboldt range of mountains, and a mile south of Love-lock, Nev. In the region of the lake he entered the land of the Plute, the chief of whom was Winnemucca. The trailmakers were met by the Indian chieftain with open arms.

General Fremont and his party were guests of the Plute band for many days. Familiarity with other tribes had taught Fremont a method of communication by means of signs. He asked the Indian chief if he, in his great wisdom, could tell the white man whence came the red men—their origin. The aged chief by signs indicated that the history of the Indians went back to the beginning of the world. It told how his ancestors had driven a whole nation into a huge cavern and sealed them there to perish.

When years later Chief Winnemuc-ca had learned the white man's tongue the Plute legends spread among the pioneer miners and finally reached the ears of scientific men.
At Winnemucca's death his daughter Sarah became attached to the families of army officers, and through them the legends became public.

Her granddaughter, Sarah Winnemucca, was educated in a reservation school. Her imagination fired by the legends of her people, she repeated them to her instructors, until finally Prof. J. C. Jones, chief of the archeological department of the state university, determined to make a search for the lost cave. The stories indicated that it must be somewhere near the Humboldt lake. Sarah Winnemucca picked a spot as near as the legends could guide her, from which point the scientists conducted their search successfully.

KIND DEED WINS A BRIDE

Westerner Befriends United States Soldier and Reaches Heart of Easterner.

Cottonwood Falls, Kan.—Befriend-ing a soldier at Fort Leavenworth several years ago has just won for C.
V. Riggs of Cedar Point a New Jersey bride.

Riggs, who is a painter, used to work in Leavenworth, and there became acquainted with a young soldier of the fort, who was taken ill and died. The young man's only near relative was a sister, Miss Mertie Hoag-bin of Rosenhayn, N. J., who was unable to come to him.

During the soldier's illness Riggs wrote many letters to the young sister, telling of her brother's illness.
After his death the letters continued.
Last week Miss Hoagbin came to Kansas. She and Mr. Riggs were married by Probate Judge Coverdill.

SAYS IT'S HUSBAND'S RIGHT

Can Choose Wife's Woman Friends, Declares Court in Dismissing Suit.

Cleveland, O.—A husband has a legal right to choose his wife's woman friends, Judge Vickery so ruled when he dismissed the divorce petition of Mrs. Catherine Eddy and the cross-petition of George E. Eddy and recommended a reconciliation. "No woman has a right to associate with other women over her husband's objections," said Judge Vickery. "No woman has any right to go out night after night without her husband. Woman's clubs must not be allowed to destroy husband's happiness."

Eddy's attorney announced after Judge Vickery's ruling that Eddy is willing to be reconciled if his wife will abandon her friends to whom he ob-
without a word to her husband.

Vienna that Emperor Francis Joseph has ordered that all the gardens surrounding the imperial palace be used food for the people.

WHY A GRATE FIRE

"Don't you believe in grate fires?" Lydia drew up her chair, behind the grate and prepared herself for the questions that such a position inspired.
The grate was Myra's.

"Yes," replied Myra, "but I think they are dangerous."

"Because of the sparks?" innocently demanded Lydia.

"Well, yes, if you use the word 'sparks' in the old-fashioned sense."
"Gracious!" exclaimed Lydia. "I had no such thought. But why should they be dangerous in that way?"

"Simply," explained Myra, "because a grate fire is so conducive to sentimental dreamings that I never knew a man and a woman to sit down before one but straightway they would fall to romancing; and if they were young and unmarried ten to one they would be persuaded, by the subtle and persuasive influence of the fire, to exchange vows, or to do something equally foolish."

"How absurd!" laughed Lydia. "Did you ever happen to know of such a case?"

"Indeed I did," replied Myra. "I was thinking of Irene Leighton and Clive Wheaton when I spoke. Of course they were both of a sentimental nature, and they were a bit smitten with each other before he made his first call, but at the same time I don't believe he would ever have proposed to Irene if she had not seated him before a beautiful grate fire upon that first evening."

"Dear me!" Lydia drew nearer to the dangerous flames. "Do you mean to say that he fell into the fire, speaking metaphorically, the minute he sat down?"

"Oh, I don't suppose he proposed instantaneously after taking his seat, but he is excessively literary, and he began by recalling various scenes in his favorite novels where the hero and heroine had talked their affairs over before a fire, and then he asked Irene whether she had ever read the 'Reveries of a Bachelor.'"

"And she had?" breathlessly demanded Lydia.

"No, she hadn't," went on Myra. "So he told her all about the book and how the hero of it was a lonely old bachelor who was accustomed to sit before his solitary fire and console himself for the lack of a real companion by some creature out of his fancy and out of the ashes. Then, of course, Clive went on to talk about his own dreary existence and to tell how he had not even a fire for companiship, but that he had a picture of a happy newly wedded pair sitting before a fire and planning their future together. This was the poor man's substitute both for a fire and for a wife."

"And of course Irene couldn't resist remarks so touching and original," put in Lydia.

"She couldn't! When he went home that evening they had already planned on which side of their living room they would have the grate and whether they would burn coal or wood."

"That was lovely," sighed Lydia.
"But don't you dare tell me that the cold glare of day or the sight of the ashes in the grate caused her to repent the next morning."

"Well, if she repented she never admitted the fact," declared Myra.
"For Irene, with all her sentimentality, is a girl of pluck. Just the same, I am quite sure that if she and Clive had sat down before a gas grate on that first evening I should never have been invited to act as bridesmaid next month."

"But I think it was his knowledge of literature that fanned the flame of her fancy," mused Lydia, as she mechanically took up the poker and began to stir the fire. "It's so unusual in these days to meet a man who knows anything about books or who could recall a single heroine who had ever been wooed before a fire, so I'm not surprised that Irene was fascinated.
If Clive had sat down before her fire and begun to talk about insurance or real estate I am sure that Irene would not have accepted him even if he had followed up such a conversation with a proposal."

"Perhaps not," admitted Myra. "But I do believe that it was the fire that did it."

"What kind of dress did Irene have on that evening?" demanded Lydia.
"You know that costume has a great deal to do with such situations, and if she wore the kind of gown that lends itself to firelight and if she sat near enough to the blaze so that her features could be illuminated by the fitful flame," as the novelists put it, why, I can easily understand Clive's quick surrender."

"I don't know anything about these details," laughed Myra. "I only know that the fire was the matchmaker."

"Well," declared Lydia, "I am going to ask father to have our gas grate changed to a real log-burning love-persuading fireplace and then be careful who sits before it."—Chicago Daily

WHAT'S IN A GOWN?

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS.

(Copyright, 1932, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

Leonard saw the gown for the first time in the Van Tyle's drawing room. His artistic senses were stimulated to a degree quite foreign to them, for Leonard was not of an artistic nature. He was the more surprised, then, that a gown worn by a perfectly strange woman should so excite his admiration.

Therefore, in view of the strange emotion awakened within him, he went immediately to his hostess and craved an introduction to the girl in the pink dress.

His hostess raised rebuking eyebrows at him.

"Pink! My dear Eric, that is new dawn, not pink!" She let fall the last word as if it were a word erased from the latest dictionary for society.

"All right, new dawn," laughed Eric, rejoicing that he was a mere man and not expected to know pink from any other color. He followed his hostess until she had piloted him and left him at anchor beside Elise Watterman, who had turned with a delighted smile at his approach, and Eric knew the girl outmatched her new dawn gown both in beauty and the effect on his senses in general.

Eric fell in love with her. He was a struggling journalist, with scarcely enough of worldly goods to hold him securely in the world of success. Yet his precipitate fall into the realm of love was none the less violent.

When he danced a few minutes later with Elise and felt his hand touch the back of the new dawn gown and realized that the girl herself was within it Eric vowed that he would write the points off his pen in an effort to make himself worthy to win Elise Watterman for his own.

Before the idea for the great play came to him, Eric saw as much as possible of Elise. He tried, without putting it into words, to convey to her the knowledge that she was the mistress of his heart, and that one day he would tell her so. It seemed difficult, and yet Eric felt occasionally that Elise was sending queer little telegraphic messages of rather delightful import into his inner consciousness. The knowledge only inspired him the more, and his senses reeled in anticipation of the day upon which his tongue could express the love he bore her.

When the great idea came to him for the play that was to make him famous Eric made the one false step in his career. He went off into the seclusion of the country to concentrate and left no address behind him.

When Elise Watterman read his brief note of farewell a feeling of depression swept over her. She felt suddenly very lonely, and knew that she would not be really happy until Eric Leonard returned to her side. She wished that he had at least trusted her with his address.

So the days wore on and Eric Leonard created the parts of a great play in the five months he worked in his enforced seclusion. More than a little dragged and tired from strenuous tension of nerves and energy, he made his way back to living beings and the city of friends.

He had no premonition, no hint of the tragedy that was awaiting him in town. Elise Watterman's father had been found guilty of embezzlement, had been sentenced, but escaped punishment by a shot. Elise, feeling the disgrace keenly, had disappeared from the face of the earth. At least Eric Leonard found his search for her in vain. His misery did not, however, prevent managers from reading his play and accepting it with flattering alacrity. The play was strong and the public welcomed it after many successive failures had been withdrawn.

It was the sudden sight of the new dawn gown in a second-hand clothing shop that finally gave Elise back to him.

Fortunately for Eric's purpose the clothing man had bought much from the wardrobe of Elise and knew her address. Having obtained it and purchased the frock Eric went his way.

He found his dawn girl bending over the bit of fine embroidery by which she was beginning her life as a working girl. She was dressed in simple black and her hair shone like a sunrise above the somber clouds. Her smile when she looked up at her visitor and realized all that his presence meant was wonderful to behold. Eric drew a quick breath, then stepped forward and crushed her in his arms. The proud golden head drooped against his shoulder.

"Elise," Eric whispered brokenly, for he was trembling with the joy of knowing that she was safe within his arms, "my girl of the new dawn."

Miles Here and There.

In England a mile means the familiar 1,760 yards, but in Iceland it means 2,240 yards, and in the Highlands it may mean the old Scots mile of 1,976 yards. In Switzerland the hardy mountaineers think 9,153 the proper thing, even when, as generally is, it is very much uphill. The Swiss is the longest mile of all, being followed by the Vienna post mile of 8,296 yards. The Flemish mile is 6,869 yards, the Prussian 8,237 yards, and in Denmark they walk 8,244 yards and call it a stroll of a mile. The Turks are satisfied with 1,826 yards and the Italians shorten the distance of a mile to 1,766.

F. W. Froemke and Frank C.

Gardner and their wives drove over from Lake Alfred Monday of last week, and on the following day, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Pierce and Miss Nelson, of Daytona Beach, started on a motor trip to Miami and down-the-coast points, returning yesterday afternoon.

The party reported a delightful trip, the weather all that could be asked for both coming and coming, and very few bad roads to speak of. The ten miles before reaching the county line, while now dry, leaves a rather unfavorable impression with the motorist as compared with the roads of counties farther south. Friends were visited at Stuart, Hobe Sound, Palm Beach and Miami; side trips were made into the everglades from Delray and Dania, where there are some very extensive developments. They report that the showing made upon everglade lands reclaimed during the past three years goes far toward supporting the most extravagant prophecies of the South Florida farming enthusiasts.

One colony on the south New River canal, with about 800 acres cultivated, has already sent out over 500 cars of vegetables this season, with apparently as much more to follow.

AND NO BETTER TROOPS

Are Wonderfully Intelligent and are Remarkable Skill in Trench Warfare—That Each Every Ten Days for Every British Soldier.

By E. ASHMEAD BARTLETT,

Special News Service Correspondent.

General Headquarters, London.

At the outbreak of the war most everyone in England had complete confidence in the British small army, and felt certain that it will give a splendid account of itself on the continent. On the other hand there was widespread mistrust of the capabilities of the new territorial army, either for purposes of defense, or for service abroad.

But I give my own impression from what I saw during my visit to the front, and also the opinions of various people—without mentioning names.

which is forbidden by the censor—unless when they have served.

The vast majority of the men who are in the ranks of the territorial forces are drawn from a different class to those who enlist in the regular army.

Some are clerks from the London district holding good positions. There are men who come from the country, and others who hold positions of a highly important and confidential character, such as secretaries, accountants and mechanical engineers. Every branch of trade and industry is represented in the ranks.

They are men who have joined the army out of a sense of duty, because they feel that every able-bodied man should play some role, however small, in the defense of his country.

They have been obliged to throw up employment which was bringing them in large salaries, and now support their homes and families on the army's shilling and separation allowances. Some of the battalions sent to the front had to meet the baptism of fire under the most trying circumstances.

French is Delighted.

But Sir John French himself is delightened with them. A corps commander said to me: "I consider the territorial battalions under my command the equal of any of the line battalions.

Let them send me out as many as they can. I can ask for no better troops after they had a few weeks of experience in the face of the enemy."

A brigade commander spoke as follows: "My territorials are a wonderful lot. I never saw finer troops. The men are wonderfully intelligent. They are as keen as mustard, and are acquiring a remarkable skill in trench warfare."

Take the case of a crack corps, like the "Artists' Rifles." Our losses in officers has been so heavy that Sir John French decided on the novel experiment of keeping the whole of this corps battalion behind the line, and training all ranks as officers. As they received a certain standard of progress they were given commissions and advanced to regular battalions. I made inquiries as to how this experiment had worked out in practice.

Our corps commander told me he had received a large number of these new officers from the Artists' Rifles, and that with extremely few exceptions they had turned out admirably.

A love of cleanliness is one of the strongest traits in the Anglo-Saxon man. The best of troops speedily lose their pride and self-respect if they are obliged to live in filthy surroundings, which it is impossible for them to clean themselves, their uniforms and equipment. The conditions in Flanders throughout the winter have been about as bad as any troops have ever had to face. The army medical corps took the problem in hand and has shown remarkable skill and ingenuity in its solution.

Bath Every Ten Days.

Scattered over northern France and Flanders are many factories for making hot sugar and beer. These possess enormous vats such as most of us are familiar with in breweries at home. As their legitimate occupation, in the case of those situated close to the firing line, is now gone, they have been utilized for the purpose of washing the British army.

This experiment of cleaning every man in an army several hundreds of thousands strong once in every ten days has never been tried before in war. Yet so complete is the organization that, except under exceptional circumstances, every man and officer is made of his hot bath every ten days.

A battalion comes off duty and marches to rest in its billets, the men and their uniforms covered with mud.

Above all, it is necessary to change their shirts and underclothes.

Let it not be supposed that the only enemy our men have to face is found in the trenches. There is another, who comes on a horrible nerve-racking form of guerrilla warfare in closer proximity to you after a few days rest in the mud.

His pertinacity and vitality in surviving the hardships ten times as

CALL OF MASS MEETING OF DAYTONA CITIZENS DREW HUNDREDS OF FOLK

of the action taken. What to do with the invitation was submitted to a vote of the council; acceptance was unanimously voted, but the matter of attending the mass meeting was left to the pleasure of the councilmen as individuals. A few minutes later, Councillmen R. E. Stevens and E. J. Mills appeared on the floor of the opera house, amid loud applause.

Again Mr. Nelson arose and testily remarked that although an invitation had been extended to the mayor and council to come and see what was going on, Messrs. Stevens and Mills were the only ones that "had the sand" to accept. Thunderous applause greeted his statement to the effect that the invitation to the city authorities had included the mayor. The two councilmen were loudly urged to mount the platform; both demurred, but finally Mr. Stevens arose, strode to the rostrum and took a seat near the chairman and secretary. Mr. Mills preferred the seat he had taken in the audience.

Mr. Nelson addressed to Councilman Stevens a number of questions concerning the city's finances, among these being an inquiry as to what was included in the $15,000 item in the budget described as "sundries." The councilman replied, naming several things to be paid for, among these being the city's part of the cost of building the seawall, fill, etc., along Beach street between Orange and Magnolia. To the query about what was meant by "Publicity, $4,400," Mr. Stevens answered that this appropriation was made, subject to approval by the Florida legislature, and that it is to be used to defray expenses of advertising the city by means of booklets, such as other resort cities of the state have used profitably.

When Mr. Stevens was invited to make a statement, he arose and gave a perfectly good account of himself and the city council's stewardship.
He stated that undoubtedly the present system of municipal government is far from perfect, but reminded his hearers that they should not expect flawless management of a two and a half million dollar corporation for $336 a year, which is the amount the Daytona councilmen receive for their services. He also expressed his great pleasure at seeing so many people sufficiently awakened from their long sleep to sit up and take a little interest in their town; and he made it distinctly understood that if any persons present desired his job as councilman and chairman of the street committee, they couldn't take it off of his hands any too quick to suit him.

Former Mayor E. W. Greene spoke for several minutes, discussing difficulties met by municipal authorities and recommended that no unfair action be taken by the assembled citizens. He declared that the present civic conditions were no more than he had anticipated for two or three years, and chided the people of Daytona for not having earlier become interested in municipal affairs. He mentioned several things he termed extravagances, and expressed his opposition to the proposed expenditure of $4,400 for publicity purposes.

R. L. Smith stood up and expressed his great joy at seeing several hundred people apparently beginning to care whether Daytona is on the map or not.

After the meeting had proceeded nearly two hours without "getting anywhere," S. H. Gove arose and declared somewhat acrimoniously that some definite action be substituted for the great amount of talk that had been going on. This had the effect of centering interest upon a commission-government petition that had been read earlier in the evening. The chairman was formally requested to appoint a committee to circulate the petition among the ladies and gentlemen present.

Following is a copy of the petition, to which the committee obtained 131 signatures:

"To the Honorable, the Legislature of the State of Florida:

"We, the undersigned, citizens and tax-payers of the city of Daytona, county of Volusia, and state of Florida, believing that our municipal affairs can be more economically and satisfactorily administered by a Board of Commissioners, few in number, than by an irresponsible city council, and that such affairs should be administered along strictly business lines, respectfully pray that your honorable body will, at the earliest possible date, enact the necessary legislation in that behalf."

Another paper, circulated at the same time, received 128 signatures. A verbatim copy of it also is appended:
"Whereas, Good city government can be maintained and extravagant expenditures, with constantly increasing taxes, stopped, only by the eternal vigilance of its citizens, acting with a unity of purpose and as an organized body,

"Therefore, We the undersigned citizens, taxpayers and voters of the city of Daytona do hereby subscribe our names as members of an organization to be known as the Citizens and Taxpayers League of the City of Daytona, and we request that a meeting of the undersigned be called by at least five of our number, at some date in the near future, to complete a formal organization."

The names of both men and women appear on the papers, which are now at L. G. Lyman's store, on Orange avenue. They will remain there until Thursday morning, and persons desiring to sign them may call at the place named and do so.

Joseph Osborne, who occupied a seat well back in the rear of the room and had remained silent throughout the evening, arose and said, "Mr.

WOMEN'S PEACE CONFERENCE CONVENES WEDNESDAY

THE HAGUE, April 27.—There are many women of world-wide fame here today to attend the peace conference which opens tomorrow upon the call of the queen. Miss Withington, who represents New England, says she believes that the conference will be successful in bringing about peace, adding that "if we can only make the people of each nation know that those of all the other nations do not really want the war and that it is absolutely a war of governments, I feel that we will have accomplished much." Miss Jane Adams, of Chicago, has been received with much appreciation by the delegates.

Only Way to Make Character.
You cannot dream yourself into a character; you must hammer and forge yourself into one.—Froude.

Lucky Stumble.
A man in California suddenly lost his power of speech several weeks ago. The doctors said that a vocal nerve was paralyzed. Now he has regained his speech in an equally sudden way. While carrying a bucket he stumbled and exclaimed, "Ouch," with much force. Immediately his full power of speech was restored.

Felt His Importance.
Many of the New York playgrounds have swings in which the kiddies can pull themselves up high above the ground. One little boy drew himself up, and gazed around delightedly:
"Oh, I can see a bird; and there is a leaf that I can almost touch, and—" he folded his arms proudly—"Oh, gee, I feel just as important as God."—Exchange.

Horseshoes as Bringers of Luck.
Sailors cherish horseshoes as bringers, and before the days of naughts it was Jack's practice to throw a horseshoe upside down on the deck of his ship. Nelson nailed a shoe with the points upward on the mast of the Victory before he ship into action at Trafalgar.

As to Palmistry.
If the lines of the hand really indicate how long a person will live, insurance people would have palmistry long ago.

Convalescent.
Butler (to Rev. Dr. Priestley):
